Uber for Business helps Uber save time and money on employee travel

Uber's Global Travel and Expense (T&E) team manages systems and processes for 27,000+ employees across 60 countries. In 2022 alone, they supported 14,000 traveling employees who submitted 74,000 expense reports.

Because those numbers are large and the T&E team is small, they're always looking for ways to scale, automate, and increase overall efficiency. To meet those goals for employee ground transportation and meals while traveling, the team taps into Uber for Business.

Reduced administrative time

Uber for Business helps automate tasks, like sending invitations to employees to join the corporate account. An integration with Workday also helps Uber's T&E team keep up with an ever-changing global roster. In addition, automated receipt uploading with an SAP Concur expense integration reduces the human inaccuracies that can come from employees manually keeping and uploading them.

Control and visibility

The Uber for Business platform makes it easy for the T&E team to comply with duty of care obligations, as they can track the locations of employees while they're travelling for work. The platform's data also informs targeted communications that T&E sends to specific teams or top travelers.

Use case

Business travel

The global footprint [of Uber] comes with complexities. Anything we do—as it relates to tools, systems, products, or programs—we have to focus on scale. How can we automate and be efficient? Uber for Business hits that mark.

Increased employee productivity

With the Concur expense integration, Uber employees don't spend valuable hours finding and submitting receipts—ride and meal receipts automatically flow directly into the company's expense provider dashboard.

Lowered risk

The expense integration and use of corporate cards also provides transparency into employee spending while traveling. This lessens the oversight burden on managers, eliminates the problem of lost receipts, and ensures that expense reports are correct.
